this stunning little creature is only 3cm long, the eye-catching patterns actually help to obscure the shape of the body and provide a perfect camouflage.

most of the time harlequin shrimp can be found in pairs and their relationships appear to last for their entire lifespan. the females are easy to spot because they are larger than the males.

harlequin shrimp feed on live starfish, their unique technique almost appears to be cruel, by human standards: they nourish their prey in order to keep it alive as long as possible. by doing so they play a significant role in balancing starfish populations of their biotope.
